The Windy Road of Health Care Reform:
Why the Current Muddle and What Lies Ahead?

Mark A. Peterson is a Professor of Public Policy, Political Science, and Law, at UCLA. He has written extensively on the presidency, Congress, interest groups, and public opinion, evaluating interactions among them, and their implications for policy making, with a focus on national health care policy, Medicare reform, and HIV/AIDS politics and policy. Not only has Dr. Peterson been widely honored for his contributions to the scholarly community, but he also was a founding team member of a multidisciplinary initiative to transform the U.S. health care system, which helped advise Congress on the inclusion of disease prevention and health promotion strategies in the Affordable Care Act. In his public lecture, Dr. Peterson will be discussing his recent groundbreaking research on health care reform, underscore the institutional and ideological reasons for our health care reform challenges, and address the current politics surrounding health care. Just days away from the 2018 midterms, Dr. Peterson also will share his expert perspective on what the weeks ahead hold in store for our nation.
