Vermont 4-H Independent Member

Guidelines

Definition

The Vermont 4-H Independent Project Member is an individual study 4-H delivery mode which involves youth participation in a planned 4-H program as 4-H Members without 4-H club affiliation. It is a self-directed, planned learning experience in a specific subject matter area with limited adult direction. Examples of an independent project member include self study, home study courses, mentoring or “shadowing” with an expert. An independent 4-H member works directly with a trained adult volunteer in an informal setting but not in the traditional group setting. This adult may be a parent, mentor, project or club leader, camp counselor, teacher, or paid 4-H staff who has agreed to serve as a leader for the project. The independent project mentor/advisor must be approved and registered with the local 4-H educator and complete the leader approval process.

Being an independent 4-H member allows a young person to be a 4-H member and learn about a project of his/her choice, even if it is not available in a local 4-H club.

It gives the 4-H member an opportunity to study a non-traditional subject matter area, take a different direction in activities, or expand on an already existing project. It also gives the member the freedom to determine and complete his/her own project without being a member of an organized 4-H club.

Objectives

- To provide a 4-H experience for individual youth with varied abilities, interests, needs, backgrounds, and situations.

- To involve youth in the 4-H program when a 4-H club is not available in either his/her subject matter or geographic area.

- To enhance personal growth, communication skills, and family strengths.

- To encourage adults to mentor youth and for youth to bond with a caring adult.
Requirements of an Independent 4-H Member

- All independent members are under the direction of an approved and registered adult mentor/advisor with expertise in the subject matter area, and the local 4-H educator.

- Members must complete a Vermont 4-H Independent Member Application. A 4-H Club Member Enrollment form must be completed unless the member is previously registered.

- Independent members must utilize existing 4-H curriculum whenever possible.

- Evaluation should be conducted on an ongoing basis throughout the project, with the member designing the way to report progress toward his/her goals. The member should also plan to display, exhibit, or report on the work done in the 4-H independent project through existing local and state 4-H events.

- A 4-H independent is eligible for county and state recognition provided that the 4-H member has met all of the requirements for receiving the award.

- Complete and submit 4-H member record and appropriate project records.

Resources

Whenever possible, existing 4-H curriculum must be utilized. These and additional resources are available through your local University of Vermont Extension office.
