PIH is built upon a foundation of volunteerism and has strived, since its founding, to cultivate a concerted movement of people and communities dedicated to fighting social injustices and health inequities. As we explore the best and most enriching ways to create both hands on volunteer experiences and the space for engagement in the issues of social justice and health equity, we also are committed to staying true to our core principles, particularly our goal of building capacity at the local level by creating jobs and providing training in the communities we serve.

To move towards better achieving our goal of bringing the fruits of modern medicine to those who need it most, we hope to bring on volunteers from around the world to help us in particular with bringing on supporters of all kinds who are dedicated to fighting for justice and equity. We encourage you to explore the many ways you can take action to support Partners in Health by visiting www.pih.org and signing up for our electronic mailing list.

In addition, there are many other networks and resources that can be helpful as you find the best way to engage personally or professionally in efforts to promote health and social justice.
