

COURSE DESCRIPTION:

CMSI 311 is part one of a newly developed advanced graduate level seminar sequence offered through the Vermont's Interdisciplinary Leadership Education for Health Professionals (VT-ILEHP) Program which is required for all VT-ILEHP long-term trainees and fellows. It is a Fall Semester graduate course cross-listed in several departments and offered through Continuing Education for variable graduate credits (2-3). The specific content is guided by the five competency areas emphasized throughout the VT-ILEHP core curriculum: neurodevelopmental and related disabilities; interdisciplinary process and collaborative teaming; cultural competence; family-centered care; and leadership in Maternal and Child Health.

The VT-ILEHP Curriculum Council has actively and collaboratively developed the scope and sequence of the course content. This course is offered to community health professionals and related service providers, as well as students and faculty not directly involved in the VT-ILEHP Program. As an advanced course in interdisciplinary research and practice, this would not be a course typically taken by undergraduate students. Students who do not have graduate status are required to get the instructor's permission to take this course.

CMSI 312 is part two of the advanced graduate level seminar sequence described above and is offered in the Spring Semester.
