how far is too far?

is rally's new blog just free speech or has he gone overboard?

Rally Cat's back at it, but this time... his transgressions have gone viral. There was a time when our favorite animal representative was content to illegally party it up in L/L, make fun of swimmers' packages and hook-up with other animal representatives, but now he may have gone too far.

Sources close to Mr. Cat informed the water tower that Rally Cat's blumblr blog page "Secret Life of a Bad Bad Mascot" has recently come under attack by UVM staff and students, as well as animal representatives from other colleges and universities.

The first complaint leveled at Rally focuses on the site's name. "Mascot' is a really demeaning term," claims Ralphie Rocket, animal representative of Green Mountain State University. "If we're all mascots, what does that say about me? I don't go around saying, you know, 'look at me! I'm a guy in a costume! I'm a mascot! That's it!' I prefer the term 'animal representative.' That really highlights all of my humanitarian efforts. I don't just put on the costume and go with the flow. I start cheers. I can run really, surprisingly, fast. I got a 3.8 GPA in high school. I've interned with NGOs. I give three or four cans of veggies to the food shelf every 36 days. 'Mascot' just doesn't encompass that identity like 'animal representative' does." Rally maintains that the use of the term 'animal representative' is "Christian Rick Sileretti has some choice words when asked about the issue, UVM student Rick Sileretti had some choice words for both sides. "Jesus. Yeah, I mean, I suppose the first amendment gives people the right to say stupid shit on their blogs, even if it offends other people who are also saying stupid shit all the time. Maybe they should focus on doing something productive instead of being cry babies. And really? They're going to SUE the SGA? Like... legally? Like... they're bringing in a lawyer and shit? Don't they have clubs to screw over and policies to eff up? And sports games to do cartwheels at? Sheesh. Get back to work!"

"I prefer the term 'animal representative' that really highlights all of my humanitarian efforts." -ralphie rocket-

Mr. Cat expands upon his argument, explaining that it takes more than one person to end a culture of sexual misconduct. Furthermore, by engaging in "animal representative brotherhood" with those who commit atrocious acts, animal representatives do little to actually remove themselves from the equation as enablers.

Rally has numerous other attacks on the animal representative lifestyle. They drink diet soda. They have poor grammar and spelling. They read the Bible. Rally makes some persuasive arguments, but, like George W. Bush in Iraq or someone with asthma who played really aggressively in the first part of a soccer game, he seems to lack an effective endgame. Instead of solving problems, fostering goodwill, and re-forming images, he and his opponents both rely on weak gossip, bitter feuding, and silly legal tactics in their quest for supremacy.

At last week's SGA meeting, several athletes and animal representative fanatics announced they were going to impeach Rally from his official post at Campus Athletics. "You represent us, Rally!" yelled one upset student. "You represent us, but your actions and words really hurt. Really, Deeply. That's why we're kicking you outta here!"

Sure, you do a good job and do everything you're supposed to. But the truth?! That's supposed to be between you and us, man!" Rally's people wouldn't have it. "Rally's off supporting our athletic teams right now," Billy Mustachionovich said. Mr. Mustachionovich is Rally's legal counsel. "He's off doing his job, and it's a job he does well. If he is let go from his position, we will press charges.

When asked about the issue, UVM student Rick Sileretti had some choice words for both sides. "Jesus. Hey blumblr blog followers! If you can believe it, this is a picture taken today outside of the library. There was a protest against my blog, calling to impeach me! These mascots animal reps came from all over the country just to raise a fuss about little ol' me. Clearly, they like the idea of free speech when they're the ones using it. Hypocrites.

Until next time... Rally

Dear Cat Lady,

My girlfriend wants to live with me again next year but I'm not sure, what should I do?

Sincerely,

Bobby Bennett

Dear Bobby,

If you are having hesitations about sticking with your current roommate again that's typically not a good sign. My advice would be to consider whether or not you have thought about the pros and cons of leaving him. If you have no. This can only lead to a stronger urge to stay.

The city has needed a new park for some time now. Knowing that the Burlington Parks and Recreation Department has proposed a new concrete park where the old one now resides. The proposed park would be the best skate park in the area. It would be a fantastic destination for skaters. But the city has not approved the plan yet.

Us is sick: snoring. There is absolutely nothing worse than an obnoxious, thunderous demonic plague when one of your roommates has caught your roommate fist-pumping and moaning about having a room to yourself, cooking your own meals, and not having a roommate drag you out of bed by the hair. This is the mode that I'm in, and I can't quite shake it. First, you need to find an actual existing apartment to do all these awesome things.

Lunacy: Does the apartment have a washer and dryer? Is this the answer to your question? Did you realize that there's no quality time and some quality time at the laundromat? The day is going to get a lot longer and longer and longer if you cost-operated or paid? Is this the kind of person who would be willing to pay upwards of $100 a month in which to deposit it? Then a coin-operated laundry machine in right-up your alley. For everyone else, it's kind of life-saving.

Pets: My future housemates and I are currently looking for apartments, and we found a place that allowed pets. Once we got the idea of having a dog in a whole living environment, next year, we couldn't think of anything else, and we immediately started to think of big, great possibilities. We must have a dog. Not in the immediate vicinity. I don't want to be surrounded by dogs, but it may be smarter to forgo them for that which we aren't reading? burlington's live scene gets a pick-me-up by sarahsmeyer

Burlington, historically, has not been known for its thriving music scene. Though it'd be the first to argue that we are a cultural anomaly, and, in turn, a gem, it's all too easy for outsiders to remain in my backyard dance and uncertainly watch a truck drive by. It's not too bad, though. Life in this tiny little Vermont town is a charm. The endless rain people of Austin, Texas, might be a bit more enchanted with our snowy bosoms, but the scenery makes them want to come back and see the city again.

The legendary indie rockers Sonic Youth, is playing in a church in the Universalist Church in downtown Burlington, and the outrageously great mountains—but they are our mountains, and the beautiful lake and the freakishly nice people with colby college. And Burlington, teeny tiny itty bitty Burlington, has seen Misters with the beautiful lake and the freakishly nice people with colby college. And Burlington, teeny tiny itty bitty Burlington, has never had a live music scene, as far as I know. But that's all that changing now.

The first issue of this year's winter Water Tower. I summarized up some of the evil musical events that had gone on this past summer with my non-musical friends. This issue, the annual "stuff-dude-assume-appears-in-burlington" monstrosity. Jeff Mangum (the highly elusive former Neutral

The following update from Security Media came on my Facebook feed a couple of weeks ago:

Albany never or New York, but it's a bigger and badder city than Burlington, and about this three and a half hours south. So when Burlington is about to see a concert... that's something pretty good about it down here.

Thanks for the information, guys. I just got one complaint: why did you print my name in the headline? It's a bit rude to have a good time. Maybe my name, Max, I'm not wearing enough attention, or whatever is fashionable with the scene, when I started going to shows in Burlington just a few years back. But I'm just not the only one who thinks concert
