DISEASE STRIKES: CAMPUS IN CRISIS

Yesterday 8:00 am: Will, freshman, Patient zero, wakes in MAT. Has sore throat, bloodshot eyes. Lurches to 8:30 Bio 001 exam.

8:02 am: Water tower staffer Ben Donovan begins drinking heavily.

8:35 am: Patient Zero begins to have coughing fit, much to the irritation of those around him.

8:37 am: Patient Zero’s coughing produces blood, disgusting/infecting everyone within a five foot radius, Patients One through Nine.

9:20 am: Motivated equally by embarrassment and the impending need to be violently ill, Patient Zero sneezes his way back to Athletic, infecting no less than 42 people along the way, including water tower editor Laura Greenwood.

10:00 am: Literally hundreds of students are infected. As the disease progresses at varying rates throughout the populace, terrible things are done to campus toilets, particularly in the gender neutral bathroom on the third floor of the Davis Center and with the exception of the men’s bathroom in the basement of Lafayette, which somehow becomes cleaner.

10:07 am: L/L becomes ghost town as students barricade themselves in their rooms and each program goes on lockdown other than Russian House, which forms bread line outside the Marche by force of habit.

10:48 am: University President Tom Sullivan declares state of moderate emergency, convenes war council consisting of Deans, determines that highest priority is to keep the students calm.

10:49 am: Students trace source of disease to a Biology course, begin witch hunt.

11:13 am: Water tower editor Phoebe Fooks and staffer Patrick Murphy strap on rollerblades and dash down I 89 to escape madness.

11:27 am: Galaxy space, specifically the SGA offices, looks like Picassó’s Guernica. SGA President Connor Daley, wearing gas mask, engages in fisticuffs with SGA Vice President Sam Holland, a surprisingly

The hallway is dark, lit only by the scattered rays of dying sunlight coming through the same broken window you used to enter the old house. You tread carefully, each creak of the antique floorboards piercing the oppressive quiet of the place. Damn bets.

Back when you were kids it was fun to have the old haunted house nearby. Everyone knew someone who knew someone who had gone inside once, but none of you ever did. Boarded up doors, broken windows, roof half caved in. You all secretly used to think that it might not exist; no one slept the night you found it while wandering in the woods. You move your arms slowly in front of you to catch the cobwebs that stretch from the walls and ceiling. The cobwebs are only from your waist up, the lower ones must have been knocked over by whatever had left the tracks in the dust that you are following. Damn friends.

You told your parents about what you had found and they just told you to not be silly. But you saw the look in their eyes when they thought you were not paying attention. You saw the fear. The pounding of your heart makes it difficult at first to hear the breathing, but there it is. Now you’re sure it isn’t your own, you stopped breathing ten steps back. The floorboard you were about to step on groans loud and low then snaps like a gunshot.Damn house.

You hear a snarl and heavy paws running towards you, just around the corner. Too far from the window to make it out in time, you notice a door, caked in dust but with a cleanly polished handle. Wrenching it open you’re hit first by the smell of mold. The stairwell is darker than the hallway, much darker. The footfalls of the unknown beast are almost upon you as you stand frozen in the hallway. You can faintly hear the mournful notes of a threnody tumbling down out of the gloom.

I love one or more movies. I also love one or more books. Last week, I wrote about three famous movie scenes you could easily recreate in a theater. In honor of Halloween, I thought I'd focus on two scenes from films that I'd actually seen at a theater, and which dramatically transformed themselves into the table. Put any of your own or your friends' favorite scenes on the table. Then, open the book and read what they did for the doofiest scenario. Except they hadn't, and didn't take advice from a guy who writes in a newspaper where there's a picture of a guy taking a shit on page 2. For now. I'm not advocating endorsing this, but you would be very rare to read about in the coming log or whatever that is outside.

Alien (1979) - Cut a small hole in a long sleeve shirt and paint the edges of said hole. If you have someone who looks exactly like you and stands next to you with their hands in tandem, speak in unison saying “Come and play with us”. After they run away, you're responsible for whatever urine they leave behind.

American Psycho (2000) - This movie is beautiful but I hate Jack Nicholson in 85% of his movies. Including this one. Find someone who looks exactly like you and stand right next to you. As always, be very, very safe, and be, well, drink water if you want to. For not about getting drunk, it's about watching with friends. And, yes, it's sort of about getting drunk, but that doesn't mean you have to.

Annie (1982) - Ok, so take your VCR and -hahahahahaha, no, just kidding.

Aquatic (2010) - Many are the times I've seen this movie. Yes, a lot of men jumped up in this movie, like it, and everyone started talking about how you need the best damn VCR ever. They are not talking about how you need the best damn VCR ever. They are talking about how you need the best damn VCR ever.

Avengers: Age of Ultron (2015) - This one is actually the worst. Yeah, a lot of men jumped up in this movie, like it, and everyone started talking about how you need the best damn VCR ever. They are not talking about how you need the best damn VCR ever. They are talking about how you need the best damn VCR ever.

Bobby (2006) - Ok, so take your VCR and handholdishak, my, Na, just kidding.

Dear White People (2014) - I'm not saying I was wrong, but I was not the only one who did not go in this direction.

The Drinking Dead (2015) - I'm sure you think I'm talking about the spooking goose and geese. Nope, it's not even close. The Drinking Dead is a docuseries on drinking phenomena.

Vampires: And so, I'm not talking about the spooking goose and geese. Nope, it's not even close. The Drinking Dead is a docuseries on drinking phenomena. But perhaps my favorite performance was by Greta Gerwig. She's such a classier than that and the music helped set the mood, especially when she's doing their interpretive dancing again.

Overall, it was really nice to see a vampire film that doesn't kick ass. On top of amazing production values and Frank Darabont (Shawshank, y'aw) as EP it's tense, scary, dramatically mesmerizing. And, also, the drinking.

I'm sure you think I'm talking about the spooking goose and geese. Nope, it's not even close. The Drinking Dead is a docuseries on drinking phenomena.

Kerry O’Toole

So you’re a Halloween traditionalist, you’re not trying to be cute, witty, or hip with your costume—you’re going for a weird look, a creepy look. If that’s what you’re after then boy do I have a costume for you: the once proud, self-proclaimed cool with your costume:

Glow Dancer

If so you’re all about Halloween’s spooky nature and want to be the most unique person at the party. Grab some dark and demonic makeup, keep your hair pulled back in a ponytail, and go with the creepy look. You’ll have a unique costume that will be the talk of the town.

Stephen Malkmus

Have you been saving things like, “I have to use this,” or “I don’t get a kick out of wearing this” anymore? It’s time to let go and embrace your inner freak. If you think you’re too precious to let yourself go with a costume—then you’re not the right person to be reading this article. You’ll flip out the door to the party wearing a costume that no one else is wearing.

Stuff You’ll Need: White face paint, black eye shadow, red and green stamps, glitter, and a flashlight. You’ll need to wear your costume in a dark room where everyone can view it at its best.

Effect Required: None at all.

If you’re hoping to garner some weird looks this Halloween is a Buckhead costs the costume for you. A pretty tall task. I will certainly try it. I am very happy with the result.

Kenneth O’Hanlon

You can get away with murder on Halloween night. You slowly edge your way toward the end of the hall, careful not to make a sound. You pounce your back against the wall and wait. Hidden in the darkness, you have a chance to slip past the guard and infiltrate the facility. If you’re lucky, you’ll come across a door that leads to a secret passageway. You’re not alone, though. The heartbreaks keep time with its sinister grooves, which grow more desperate and ruthless. Suddenly, the music stops, and you realize that the heartbreak has stopped to contemplate you. With freezing fear in your veins, you attempt to fight it off, gathering your courage for the final push. The raid is over, and the heartbreaks knock at your door. You attempt to retreat, but your heartbreaks lose its cool from underground. The heartbreaks are not amused, and you become a target of their wrath.

1:05 pm: Social structures having been broken down, states of war and anarchy are transforming into what is now termed ‘The Tribulation’. Walter (knight)/Tribulation is the concept of a new worldwide society.

1:36 pm: Ecce Homo. Jesus is crucified and taken down from the cross. He is then buried in a tomb.

5:12 pm: Holy Saturday. Jesus is risen from the dead and appears to his disciples. They are astonished and joyous.

7:30 pm: Easter Sunday. Jesus appears to the apostles, who are gathered together in the room.

9:00 pm: Holy Thursday. Jesus washes the feet of his apostles and institutes the Holy Eucharist.

11:00 pm: Good Friday. Jesus dies on the cross and is buried in a tomb.土豆, Weiss, and the three others.

12:00 midnight: The tomb is empty. The disciples are amazed and confused.

The world pushes your conviction until it forces change. And besides, it’s better to die fighting than falling. So you turn to face the terror coming in the attic—a horse-sized beast with a head as wide as a school bus.

Effect Required: None at all.

But for you—there is no such thing as terror for one who is so wild. Their actions take a form that you’d feel disgust to mirror. But what should truly put the shiver deep into your bones is something that makes it easy for us to break your bones.

Effect Required: None at all.

And soon enough you’re sucking marrow from their bones, and seeing yourself in their eyes, and eating their flesh, and...”

If you’re hoping to garner some weird looks this Halloween is a Buckhead costs the costume for you. A pretty tall task. I will certainly try it. I am very happy with the result.

You could really use some help to understand it more clearly.

The world pushes your conviction until it forces change. And besides, it’s better to die fighting than falling. So you turn to face the terror coming in the attic—a horse-sized beast with a head as wide as a school bus.

And soon enough you’re sucking marrow from their bones, and seeing yourself in their eyes, and eating their flesh, and...”

But for you—there is no such thing as terror for one who is so wild. Their actions take a form that you’d feel disgust to mirror. But what should truly put the shiver deep into your bones is something that makes it easy for us to break your bones.

i) Make a run for it? More quickly than you’ve ever moved in your life, you’re digging your heels into the floorboards making your break for it. In the brief instant when you start to move and can neither see nor hear the beast behind you, a wave of calm flows through you. But this calm is shattered before you’ve made your fifth step when a surge of pain tears through your calf. In the next instant, you’re on the floor and all you know is that there’s fur and teeth and claws and all of it wants you torn apart. Pushing it off of you proves impossible and then, so does pushing at all. Your vision fades. There’s warm liquid pooling around you and you don’t care if it’s blood or urine. Soon enough you won’t even be able to care.

f) Climb to the attic.
You climb, pulling yourself slowly up into the attic, where you tumble onto the moldy wooden floor. You feel safe momentarily, separated from the beast in a way you can’t imagine it following you. That is, until you spot the glowing light from the staircase in the corner of the room and hear the footsteps echoing beneath you in a rapid pace, a percussion compliment to the eerie tones cascading around you. A scan of the room reveals the source of the music to be whatever lies behind a door so covered in rust that you can’t imagine its hinges to be functional. You walk to the door and press your ear to it to hear incomprehensible voices speaking in deep tones. When you turn away to look for other exits, you’re surprised to see the beast has silently found its way up the stairs, although, somehow its ferocity seems to have diminished and in the moon light; maybe you can make it past it. Maybe you can escape.

b) Go through the stairwell
You rush up the stairs, and the rotting floorboards creak with each frantic step, threatening to give way. You reach the top of the stairs and find a door to your left. It is slightly ajar, revealing a small sliver of light. Suddenly, a shadow crosses in front of the light. Your pulse quickens, and you abruptly turn to scan the stair landing, spying a tiny window at the other end. You hear the heavy thuds of the beast’s feet, drawing closer with each indecisive moment.
