2. 100 Years of Changes

Ever since the Farm Barn was first erected, a clock towered above the courtyard chiming the hour. This clock still rests here today.

The first use for this section of the barn was dedicated to holding livestock. This is now used as an education center.

This portion of the barn held mules. Now the Renaissance School and cheese making facility have taken its place.

Along with holding livestock, the barn also held hay, grain, wood, sawdust and much more. This area is now used as a education center where day camps are held.

In the late 1880s, farm machinery was stored on the second and third floors. Today, this is now a barn with storage areas above.

In the early years when the barn was first created by the Webb’s, a stable was built for the horses. Now this is leased for the use of a bakery.
