Beyond Learning through Experience
Bangladesh 2011

Cultural competence. It is an idea that is brought up in nearly every nursing textbook that I have bought during my studies in nursing school. But there is only so much you can learn from reading. The best way to learn and retain this information is clinical experience. In this case, immersion into a place that is so different from where we have lived our lives up until nursing school. (cont’d on next page)
This past winter I had the pleasure of traveling across the world to Bangladesh to take a three and a half week course on public health. The lessons on public health were plentiful, but there was also so much else to take in. With me were twelve other nursing students, two medical lab students, a teaching assistant, our professor, Rycki Maltby, and her husband. We spent time in class daily reading journal articles regarding health and barriers for the people of Bangladesh. We went out into the communities and observed and discussed these topics with the people. We had the amazing opportunity to visit several hospitals including a hospital in Manikganj, Center for Women and Children’s health, and ICDDR,B (International Center for Diarrhoeal Diseases Research, Bangladesh).

In addition to learning about the status of public health in Bangladesh, we also were presented with another lesson. We spent time with nursing students from Institute for Business, Agriculture and Technology. These students faced adversity for the very career path they had chosen. We met a student who had to lie to her parents in order to study nursing. Nurses in Bangladesh are considered third class citizens, yet another barrier to helping improve the health status of the public. Being around these students allowed us to instill some of our confidence in our future careers as well as gain some humility for the struggles that they will fight against in the future to help their country.

One thing that I took from this experience was the knowledge that there is communication beyond words. As a nurse, this will be a very important thing to keep in mind. I was in a country where I knew very few words, mostly just “thank you” and “picture”. Yet I was still able to connect with people through other means. A smile often helped, or a friendly gesture of a nod. Sometimes we would both speak in our own languages and somehow found a sort of understanding. Conversely I found myself in a situation in a culture that I did not fully understand, and in a place where I did not always know the words to get what I needed. This left me feeling vulnerable at times, even though we were welcomed into all areas where we visited. Perhaps having experienced this feeling was one of the best things for increasing my cultural competence. It was a brief glimpse into how a future patient of mine may feel.

We found Bangladeshis to be amazingly welcoming throughout our experience. Despite all of the difficulties many of them faced, they were eager to show us more about their lives and culture. Our host and professor at IUBAT, Karen Lund shared with us the many barriers that a global health nurse would face working in a country like Bangladesh, but also taught us to celebrate the small successes as they will continue to grow. Our trip and course were great experiences that will benefit each student who went no matter what path their nursing careers take them in the future.

Healing Touch

My personal journey with Healing Touch began in 1997. That was the year the first Level One workshop was offered in the Burlington area. I had been exploring complementary modes of healing since the late 1980s when allopathic treatments were not curing my chronic fatigue syndrome. Acupuncture, chiropractics and Chinese herbs had got me back on my feet but were not techniques I wanted to try to learn and incorporate into my nursing practice. At a national Rehabilitation Nursing Conference I attended, there was a presentation on Therapeutic Touch. My interest was caught and I began reading about different types of energy work.

Many of my Rehabilitation patients had ongoing problems with pain and anxiety. Healing Touch seemed like something I could learn and use in my nursing practice. Janet Mentgen, RN, founded Healing Touch in 1989 as a continuing education program for nurses, other health care professionals, and lay persons. Learning Healing Touch has been a journey into both self-healing and learning techniques to assist others in their self-healing journeys.

The Healing Touch International describes Healing Touch as “a relaxing, nurturing energy therapy. Gentle touch assists in balancing your physical, mental, emotional, and spiritual well-being. Healing Touch works with your energy field to support your natural ability to heal. It is safe for all ages and works in harmony with standard medical care.”

There are five levels in the Healing Touch education program which leads to Certification as a Healing Touch Practitioner. The Healing Touch Program is approved by AHNA the American Holistic Nurses Association an accredited approver by the American Nurses Credentialing Center's Commission on Accreditation.

I have been able to provide Healing Touch for self-care as well as with patients, family, friends and co-workers. The techniques are wonderful for pain, stress and anxiety reduction, promoting wound healing as well as easing acute and chronic conditions. Ongoing research is documenting a variety of benefits derived from Healing Touch.

Healing Touch is offered at Fletcher Allen Health Care as a free service through volunteers in the Spiritual Resource Center. There are also nurses on a variety of units who incorporate Healing Touch in their nursing practice. The Vermont State Board of Nursing position statement regarding the Role of the Nurse in Holistic Health includes energy work as within the RN scope of practice.

Kappa Tau

MEMBER SPOTLIGHT

Lila Fuller

Introduction of Lila Fuller
Kappa Tau member since 2009

Lila Fuller

Lila became involved with Kappa Tau while in nursing school. She was inducted in 2009. Lila felt that Kappa Tau involvement while in university was a great experience because of the opportunity to network, especially with some nurses who were not strictly working in clinical areas. Lila being someone interested in community and public health nursing felt her contact with Kappa Tau was especially beneficial in attaining her career goals.

Now that Lila is out of school, she continues to find value in her connection with Kappa Tau. She appreciates the mentoring and the continued exposure to nurses who are still very much involved with nursing and have a vested interest in what they are doing. Lila has also started to get involved with some of the volunteering Kappa Tau does in the community. Lila treasured past volunteer experiences, but she had little time while going to school. She is looking forward to volunteering more as a Kappa Tau member.

Lila Fuller is currently working as a Hospice & Palliative care nurse with the community team at the VNA of Chittenden & Grand Isle counties. She graduated from UVM in May 2010, and started as an RN Intern at the VNA in June 2010. Lila was on orientation with the Hospice team for 6 months and is now off of orientation and “just a plain old RN” as opposed to an “intern”. Lila says she “really enjoys the job - its very challenging and has me on a steep learning curve. Nothing like real world experience to sharpen clinical and interpersonal skills!”

Lila hopes to earn an MSN at some point. “I have not figured out yet what I would like to specialize in, so my plan is to take a few years, gain some more experience and then reassess my desire for higher education. I am in a 2 year commitment to the VNA so I know I will be a Hospice nurse at least until June 2012. If my experiences continue on their positive trajectory, I can see myself continuing with end of life care in some capacity or another.”
Announcements:

Kappa Tau won the 2011 International Award for Chapter Global Community Building Award.

This will be awarded at the Biennial Convention in the fall. Stay tuned for more news....
