NARRATIVE REPORT

Below I highlight accomplishments in infectious diseases immunology, educational innovation, leadership and scholarship, clinical ethics leadership, and public health communications.

Infectious diseases immunology

In the first decade of my career, I studied immune protection from tuberculosis and mucosal immune protection from HIV transmission.

With Dartmouth's Ford von Reyn and collaborators, I characterized baseline and vaccine-mediated humoral and cytokine responses to a new tuberculosis vaccine candidate (SRL172) in a 2,013-subject NIH-funded phase III trial in Tanzania. We also characterized T cell responses to a newly resynthesized version of that vaccine (DAR-901) in preclinical and phase I human studies in the United States, leading to the following accomplishments:

- (1) Progressive development of two tuberculosis vaccine candidates,
- (2) The novel identification that interferon gamma (IFN- γ) responses to mycobacterial antigens correlate with natural immune protection from HIV-associated tuberculosis,
- (3) The observation that polyantigenic IFN- γ responses are associated with greater protection from HIV-associated tuberculosis than monoantigenic IFN- γ responses

Our newest finding, still in review in early 2026, identifies for the first time a human immunological correlate of vaccine-mediated protection from tuberculosis with confirmation that the same marker predicts the efficacy of a different vaccine in preventing tuberculosis in non-human primates.

In parallel epidemiological subsidies of the larger DarDar trial, I showed that low body mass index predicts future risk of tuberculosis among people with HIV in Tanzania, and helped identify genetic correlates of protection from tuberculosis in collaboration with then-Dartmouth now-Case Western geneticist Scott Williams.

In studies of mucosal immune protection from HIV transmission identified two key findings:

- (1) Immunoglobulin concentrations in cervicovaginal lavage specimens correlate with inhibition of CD4+ target cell infection, in collaboration with PI Charles Wira PhD of Dartmouth, and,
- (2) The finding that semen protects target cells from HIV infection via decreased cell surface expression of CD4 and CCR5, in studies I initiated.

Educational innovation, leadership and scholarship

In the second decade of my career, I emphasized educational innovation and leadership.

At Dartmouth's Geisel School of Medicine, I led two required medical school courses: the second-year infectious diseases course (whose course evaluations went from middling to among the best in the institution) and an early transition to residency course called Advanced Medical Sciences in which students also engaged on reflections about professional identity formation and engaged individualized small group sessions.

I also co-created two courses with Dartmouth medical anthropologist Sienna Craig: "HIV/AIDS through a Biosocial Lens: Thirty Years of a Modern Plague" in 2013 and then "Rites of Passage" in 2017.

From 2011-2015, I led the redesign of the medical school curriculum at the request of then-Dean Wiley "Chip" Souba MD. This effort closed in 2015 amid an institutional budget crisis and the installment of a new dean, Duane Compton. However, once financial issues were addressed, those plans were implemented in 2018, around the time I left Dartmouth for University of Vermont. Key features of the curriculum revision effort that I led were integrated case-based courses that integrated related courses and the creation of cross-cutting curricular threads such as regarding health care delivery science and the ethics and humanities working group (which I co-founded with Dartmouth ethicist Bill Nelson PhD).

Beyond course innovation, I co-founded a new fellowship for medical student ethics scholarship, the Swigart Fellowship, with Dartmouth ethicist Bill Nelson. The ethics and social medicine components of the curriculum were the subjects of Academic Medicine perspective pieces, which I led. In 2015-2016, I was elected to a one-year term as chair of the Geisel Academy of Master Educators.

In 2016, I became the Director of Education at The Dartmouth Institute of Health Policy and Clinical Practice, overseeing their existing residential master of public health (MPH) program along with, in collaboration with Dartmouth's Craig Westling, the creation of a new hybrid online/residential MPH program.

For this work of educational innovation and leadership, I won a number of awards. I was voted Distinguished Lecturer in 2009 by preclinical students, was given the Clinician Science Teaching Award in 2010 by the graduating seniors, won the Department of Medicine's Almy Professor's Award for Excellence in Teaching in 2011, elected as a national Gold Humanism Scholar by the Arnold P Gold Foundation in 2012, and was awarded Geisel's C. Everett Koop Courage Award in 2018. I am most proud, however, that I was selected by graduating Geisel students as one of their farewell speakers at graduation every year from 2010-2018.

After my 2018 transition to the University of Vermont Larner College of Medicine, my commitment to educational innovation. I helped revise and create the social medicine curriculum consisting of around 20 integrated sessions across the preclinical years, with then UVM educator Shaden Eldakar-Hein, as described in two publications in BMC Medical Education. Following advocacy for a social medicine curriculum, I helped advocate successfully for the creation of a director of social medicine curriculum. In 2025-2026, at the request of Senior Associate Dean for Medical Education Dr. Christa Zehle, I led the Professional Identity Formation (PIF) Task Force to recommend ways of expanding and improving the 4-year PIF curriculum.

At Larner, I was proud to be awarded the Leonard Tow Humanism in Medicine faculty award from the graduating medical students in 2022. In 2026, I was selected to present the annual Rev. Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr., Health Equity Lecture on "Code Blue! Restoring Trust in Health Care."

At a national level, I have been a member of multiple committees at the National Board of Medical Examiners, including the General Principles Item-writing Guide group which created a guide on improving clinical relevance of the content of the United States Medical Licensing Examination now distributed to all question-writers.

Clinical ethics leadership and scholarship

After several years as a clinical ethics consultant, I became chair of the Ethics Committee at Dartmouth-Hitchcock Medical Center in 2013, succeeding my mentor, world-renown ethicist and neurologist Dr. Jim Bernat.

In that role I grew the team of clinical ethics consultants, expanded our regional educational offerings in collaboration with colleagues at the University of Vermont Medical Center, and published regarding medical education in ethics as well as regarding the emerging field of organizational ethics.

In 2018, I was recruited to lead the ethics program at University of Vermont Medical Center. There I doubled the ethics team size, expanded ethics teaching across the preclinical curriculum, created a clinical ethics fellowship, and co-created several new institutional policies and multidisciplinary teams. These policies include the institution's abortion policy (which essentially constitutes Vermont's abortion policy from 22 weeks of gestation and beyond), new policies on audiovisual capture of and by patients as well as regarding the post-mortem use of reproductive tissues by patient surrogates. I also helped initiate an institution-wide policy and new preventive team (originally called the Behavioral Response Team, now the Collaborative Care Response Team) to help mitigate violent patient behavior and other forms of conflict in the inpatient setting. A policy I created with a team of collaborators on post-mortem utilization of reproductive tissues has been replicated at other medical centers and we published about our policy on the ethical management of patient violence. The 2020 emergence of the COVID pandemic provided ample opportunities for clinical ethics leadership. I helped both UVMMC and the State of Vermont set their vaccine allocation policies (including promotion of enhanced access for BIPOC community members in response to higher serious diseases rates) and provided ongoing guidance to clinical leaders at UVMMC and the State regarding rationing of COVID and other medications as well as allocation of scarce testing supplies. In 2025, I co-founded the institution-wide Compassionate Care Conference with colleagues in palliative care, the Office of Culture, Experience, and Community Health, case management, nursing leadership and medical psychology.

My ethics scholarship continues with publications in major journals regarding clinical ethics challenges. Highlights include a collaboration with ethicists around the country on how to build organizational ethics programs on clinical ethics foundations, and a series of publications now coming out following a national survey of organizational ethicists. In 2020, I wrote in the New England Journal of Medicine about the ethics of rationing before and during COVID.

Most recently I co-founded a new section in the journal Clinical Infectious Diseases called Ethics Rounds with Johns Hopkins clinical ethicist and infectious diseases physician Dr Olivia Kates MD. In July 2024, I was elected to serve a two-year term as a member of the Healthcare Ethics Consultant Certification Commission.

Public health outreach

The Albert Schweitzer Fellowship has been a major focus of my public health work since my fellowship year at Duke in 1996. During fellowship in Boston in the mid-2000's, I interviewed at the Harvard Medical School chapter, and mentored one Schweitzer fellow. Upon joining the Dartmouth faculty, I participated intensively in leadership of the New Hampshire/Vermont chapter including as project mentor for multiple projects and faculty advisor from 2016-2018. Since 2018, I have been part of the leadership team at the University of Vermont students, in collaboration with pediatric hospitalist Dr. Molly Rideout. I have been proud to help mentor dozens of graduate students building community outreach and partnership into their professional careers. In 2024, I was chosen as Secretary of the national board of the Albert Schweitzer Fellowship, and as a part of a new national leadership team I helped restore financial solvency of this 30-year-old organization, transitioned the national office from Boston to Tulsa, and hired a new Executive Director in early 2025.

In 2015, in response to an outbreak of drug diversion-related hepatitis C at a New Hampshire hospital, I proposed with Dartmouth ethicist Bill Nelson the formation of a national reporting system for drug diversion in order to help institutions protect patient and perpetrator safety and access to needed care. A colleague in Kansas, Tom Knight, created this system starting in 2019 in a new non-profit called HealthCareDiversion.org, after which I served as a member of the national advisory board for several years.

Since 2013, I have written for national news publications such as The Atlantic's online health section, New York Times, STAT, and Washington Post regarding clinical ethics and health policy. I was proud to be elected as a Op-Ed Fellowship Public Voices Fellow at Dartmouth in 2016. This public health messaging continued during the COVID pandemic, via hundreds of television, radio and newspaper appearances. I was quoted regularly by all Vermont media outlets as well as national outlets like The New York Times, Wall Street Journal, Associated Press, CBC Radio Canada, National Public Radio, Cosmopolitan, and the Boston Globe among others.

For this wide-reaching public health outreach work during the pandemic, I was named Vermont Physician of the Year in 2022.
