Male Student Leaders at the University of Vermont Unite to Educate Peers about Sexual Assault and Rape

A group of male students at The University of Vermont has founded an all-male sexual assault prevention, peer education group. Their name, "One in Four," comes from the statistic that one in four college women has survived rape or attempted rape at some point in her lifetime. Their debut presentation, also called The Men's Program, is a fifty-minute presentation geared toward males that provides the knowledge and the tools to support a survivor. Additionally, the workshop teaches bystander skills so that individuals can safely intervene if they see a potential rape about to occur. Please join us in launching 1in4 as UVM's newest sexual assault prevention group.
