In the spring of 2018, CAS convened a task force to work toward identifying and describing the core competencies, or what are often referred to as “transferable skills,” that students in the College of Arts and Sciences acquire in their liberal arts coursework.

To successfully attract, retain and prepare students, the College must help them understand, and effectively communicate for themselves, the variety of skills they acquire. These skills, important in their own personal and professional development, are the same competencies sought by employers.
