Dear Catamount Families,

In news that will surprise no one, students are so excited about being on break this week. If they're home, you'll have the opportunity to talk about what's giving your student joy, and what they might need to thrive in the second half of the semester.

We can sometimes underestimate the mental load students carry, and open-ended questions are a chance to understand how your student is doing. These conversations can go a long way toward helping your student clarify, plan, and build intention about short- or long-term goals. The key, as always, is to provide an opportunity for them to talk, uninterrupted.

Or you might ask about aspirations for the summer ahead. Your student might want to explore internship opportunities and apply for an internship scholarship, or consider taking a summer course to get ahead or lighten their load next fall.

As engaged and invested partners in your student's educational journey, your curiosity supports their evolving decision-making. I hope it's an enjoyable week of recharge and reconnection for you all.

Warmly,

Erica Caloiero

Vice Provost for Student Affairs

FROM THE CENTER FOR STUDENT CONDUCT

You may have heard the recent buzz about ChatGPT, a large language model that is a powerful tool for generating text. ChatGPT has the potential to enhance learning but can also be used in ways that violate UVM's Code of Academic Integrity (pdf). UVM is continuing to consider the opportunities and also the potential harms of ChatGPT and other artificial intelligence tools so we can communicate expectations to students and educate about its ethical use.

What can you do? Encourage your student to talk with faculty about ChatGPT and whether its use is allowed in classes. While some faculty may allow or even encourage its use, many prohibit use of ChatGPT and other such technology on graded assignments. Students should be aware of expectations and talk with their instructors before using ChatGPT on assignments.
