A CHANGE YOU CAN BELIEVE IN: RACIAL JUSTICE AND STUDENT ACTIVISM ON COLLEGE CAMPUSES

Tiffany Dena Loftin is the National Director of Youth and College at the NAACP. Her primary focus is organizing Black millennials by training, mobilizing and developing new leaders to address and win racial and economic justice issues locally and around the world. Before working at the NAACP, she served as the racial justice organizer for the AFL-CIO where she trained thousands of union workers in grassroots organizing and coordinated the national accountability sessions with international leadership across the country. Tiffany has also served as White House Commissioner for President Barack Obama, was a political analyst for News One Now with TV One, and served as President of the United States Students Association. Tiffany is dedicated to the holistic liberation of her community and the belief that everyone has a talent that can change the world. She has been a national voice for education, voting rights, and racial and economic justice and has created institutional organizing structures to promote and protect real people power. Tiffany was raised in Los Angeles, CA and attended the University of California, Santa Cruz.
