University of Vermont

CONFERENCE HIGHLIGHTS

The second Integrative Pain Management Conference took place on May 7, 2021, presented by University of Vermont Integrative Health and hosted by UVM College of Nursing and Health Sciences and UVM Medical Center. The event took place live online with enduring materials for health practitioners' continuing education. Here are some highlights.

322 registrants

19 supporters (sponsors), both local and national organizations

33 states represented

5 countries represented

More than 20 professions represented

20 plenaries and concurrent sessions

8 experiential workshops

26 scholarships awarded to practitioners who work with underserved populations

98% of participants who responded to our post-conference survey said they would recommend the conference to a colleague, and 98% would come to another conference on Integrative Pain Management if we offer it again.

What our participants said:

- "There was a fantastic breadth of information provided in applicable ways and in such a manner as to inspire someone to continue research further."
- "Knowing that there is a whole-person approach to pain management is huge, as this dovetails so perfectly with my work as a health coach. I have put together a great list of resources and have expanded how I can communicate with patients/clients about pain."
- "I think the fact that it wasn't just policy and it wasn't just scientific information... it was so multifaceted."
- "The connection between climate change and human health is not being talked about enough. I loved his discussion on heat on multiple levels in the body and in our environment. The importance of Yin."
