NGP Student Vacation and Medical Leave Policy

Vacation
Training in the Neuroscience Graduate Program includes a 12-month graduate teaching assistantship from the program for the first two years, followed by support from the mentor or other sources thereafter. Your position under each of these funding arrangements is considered a 12-month, full time position which includes 2 weeks (10 days) paid vacation and the 10 university administrative closures (10 closures totaling 15 days). Please consult the current listing of administrative closures at http://www.uvm.edu/~uvmpr/?Page=adminholidays.html&SM=eventssub.html.

The “academic calendar” and its additional breaks do not apply to NGP graduate students. Unused vacation days will not be paid upon separation from the program and may not be carried forward from one year to the next.

Medical Leave
Students are also entitled to six days of medical leave per year. There will be no payment for unused days at the time of separation from the program; unused medical leave may be carried forward into the following year.

Notification Obligations
In general, students should employ an honesty policy when using vacation or medical leave (i.e., students do not need to report leave in the Peoplesoft system).

- First year students should consult with the NGP Director regarding planned vacations or extended illness.
- Upon joining a lab in the summer ending the first year, discussion of planned absences or illness should be with the mentor.
- Students are expected to avoid taking a vacation during a teaching obligation.

If circumstances cause a student to be unable to fulfill the full time training requirement, a leave of absence should be taken. Please consult the NGP Administrator for the procedure necessary to file for a leave of absence. The leave must be approved by your mentor, the NGP Director, and the Graduate College.
