

STUMP THE SCHOLARS

America's Next Game Show Craze?

Well, probably not, but the Vermont History Expo proves, once again, that history is anything but dull. On Saturday and Sunday, from 2:30 - 3:30 p.m., blue ribbon panels of distinguished Vermont historians will assemble to field your most vexing (Vermont history) questions. You can probe or challenge the likes of Kevin Graffagnino, Executive Director of the Vermont Historical Society; John Duffy, author of The Vermont Encyclopedia; and even the state's resident guru of town meetings, Frank Bryan, from the University of Vermont.

It's easy to play. Each question costs $5, and if you are able to "Stump the Scholars," you walk away with a prize.

Moderator Peter Mallary (no slouch at Vermont history himself) will be the unquestionable high arbiter of whether you have fairly "Stumped the Scholars." It's all in good fun and all for a good cause. Start preparing your questions now. See if you can "Stump the Scholars" at Vermont History Expo 2005.

The history game show will take place in the Presentation Tent. Saturday's panelists include: Kevin Graffagnio, Allen Yale of Lyndon State College, and Paul Searles of the University of Vermont.

David Miles of Billings Farm & Museum will join Frank Bryan and John Duffy on Sunday's panel.

Peter Mallary will host the game show on both days.
